

Abstract

This project examines the importance of braking systems on high performance cars and how the optimal braking performances can be achieved. Braking systems have been developed since the wheel was invented. As vehicles became more powerful, it was essential to make them safer to drive. To explore the role and development of braking systems, this report analyses all the braking technologies that are being developed and how an optimal braking system is designed for a track day car.

